STORM OVER OSSOLA: DIARY OF LUIGI PELLANDA

AUTHORHOUSE, United States, 2010. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 203 x 127 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .The SWW 50 year anniversary of Repubblica dell Ossola should give the opportunity to re-evaluate minor episodes, in books and chronicles often forgotten. Last August in Domodossola, a 50 years old man with a strange accent, went to the APT office in Domodossola, asking about a tombstone in a photograph he was carrying, His father was a German soldier who died in Crodo on 28th August 1944. This 50 years old man was Heinz-Dieter Quent who was born in Germany in 1943 and grew up in England, where he now lives near London with his wife and two sons. An aeronautical engineer and now a British citizen, Heinz- Dieter was in Domodossola with his wife looking for the tombstone with his father name on it: Heinrich Quent. A German soldier, killed in Crodo on August 23rd 1944 fighting against Italian partisans and who was buried in Domodossola. In the book Guerriglia nell Ossola it is written that The bus arrived at the designated point at 5 pm on the 23rd August. The German soldiers were asked to surrender. They refused and were shot by Ivan s machinegun. 4 were killed, 3 were injured. One was taken as prisoner and the ninth fled away injured, and would die while running away. Prisoners were sent back to tell what happened to the others. In the book L Ossola nella tempesta written by Luigi Pellanda there are only 3 names: Heinrich Quent, Adolph Wohlfabt and Ewald Paens, an hypothesis is that these 3 were the injured that died later in the hospital in Domodossola where they were taken. Paolo Bologna explains that After ten years, these graves were transferred by the...
